

GUI VS CLI

The difference between GUI and CLI is not subtle. GUI is what an idiot like me sees when I use my computer, I don't see any of the CLI using my laptop daily. I get to push buttons that are fun colors, I get to right-click to easily edit and/or adjust things, I can even draw fun pictures! That is all possible through the CLI which secretly works in the background to present me with these dumbed-down versions of what is happening in the mind of my computer. Its like emoticons versus emojis. One is a picture painting a clear humanoid face while the other is making what I can out of :). Nowadays, my macbook will automatically put an emoji in place of my emoticon. That's exactly like CLI translating to GUI.
