

“Code certainly isn’t a traditional art. I myself wouldn’t consider coding “Art” but I won’t deny that there is an art to coding. Coding is one of those things that seems like there are a bunch of different ways to do the same thing. Therefore, each person can have their own “style” of coding similar to an art style. The common debate of form vs function when it comes to art is still applicable to an individual’s code. So, while I don’t think code is capital ‘A’ “Art”, there is absolutely individual expression that can be similar to an individual’s art style.”
